

Paid Time Off Policy

BluePeak Technologies | Leave policy corpus

This document is fictional and was created only as a training dataset for a student Employee FAQ Chatbot. It is not legal, HR, tax, medical, or employment advice.

Document ID	BPT-HR-PTO-001	Version	v1.0
Effective date	2026-01-01	Next review date	2027-01-01
Owner	People Operations	Classification	Internal Training Data
Source URL	https://intranet.bluepeak.example/hr/policies/paid-time-off	Policy category	Leave

1. Purpose

BluePeak provides paid time off so eligible employees can take planned personal time away from work while managers maintain predictable staffing and business continuity. This policy establishes the entitlement, accrual, request, carryover, and separation rules for that time off.

For purpose, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

This purpose provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

The examples and explanatory wording in this purpose section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

For purpose, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

This purpose provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

2. Scope and Eligibility

This section identifies who the Paid Time Off Policy applies to and which employment or coverage conditions control. Eligibility must be determined from this document rather than inferred from a similarly named benefit, leave type, reimbursement program, or site practice.

Full-time employees receive 15 PTO days per calendar year. Part-time employees who are scheduled for 20 or more hours per week receive a prorated allowance; an employee scheduled for 20 hours per week receives 7.5 days. Temporary staff, interns, and contractors are not eligible unless a written agreement states otherwise.

Managers and process owners should apply the scope and eligibility language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

Administration of scope and eligibility should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

Employees should provide accurate information for scope and eligibility, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

Managers and process owners should apply the scope and eligibility language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

Administration of scope and eligibility should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

3. Annual Allowance and Accrual

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for annual allowance and accrual. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

The starting full-time allowance is 15 PTO days per calendar year, accrued at 1.25 days for each completed month. The tenure table below states the annual total and the corresponding monthly accrual for each band.

Tenure Band	Monthly Accrual	Annual Total	Max Balance
0-2 years	1.25 days	15 days	20 days
3-5 years	1.50 days	18 days	20 days
6-9 years	20 / 12 days	20 days	20 days
10+ years	23 / 12 days	23 days	20 days

¹ See the exception note at the foot of this page.

The examples and explanatory wording in this annual allowance and accrual section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

1. Employees based in Dublin accrue under the Irish statutory minimum where it exceeds this policy, calculated separately by Payroll.

For annual allowance and accrual, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

This annual allowance and accrual provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

The examples and explanatory wording in this annual allowance and accrual section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

For annual allowance and accrual, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

4. Requesting Time Off

This section describes the required administrative path for requesting time off. A request is evaluated under the stated eligibility, notice, documentation, and approval rules; submitting information does not by itself change a limit or create approval.

New employees may use accrued PTO after 30 calendar days of employment. Requests must be submitted in the HR portal at least five business days before the first day of leave. A request for three or more consecutive workdays must be submitted at least ten business days in advance. The manager decides based on staffing, deadlines, and the order in which requests were received. Employees should not book nonrefundable travel before the request is approved.

Employees should provide accurate information for requesting time off, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

Managers and process owners should apply the requesting time off language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

Administration of requesting time off should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

Employees should provide accurate information for requesting time off, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

Managers and process owners should apply the requesting time off language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

5. Carryover and Maximum Balance

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for carryover and maximum balance. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

Carryover is capped at 5 unused days. Unused days above the carryover cap expire on January 31. The maximum PTO balance is 20 days; accrual pauses when the balance reaches the cap and resumes after the balance falls below it.

This carryover and maximum balance provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

The examples and explanatory wording in this carryover and maximum balance section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

For carryover and maximum balance, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

This carryover and maximum balance provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

6. Unplanned Absence

This section addresses unplanned absence and must be read as a connected rule because Illness should normally be recorded under Sick Leave rather than PTO. For the applicable sick-leave allowance and accrual rule, see Section 3 of the Sick Leave and Medical Absence Policy (BPT-HR-SICK-002). the employee and manager therefore need to identify the correct policy category, confirm the controlling document ID and version, preserve the relevant request or system record, consider every stated cross-reference, and avoid treating a similar number from another benefit, leave, payroll, travel, security, insurance, or reimbursement document as though it governed this situation, while the responsible owner should explain the outcome in a way that keeps the fixed entitlement, timing, approval, and exception language intact.

Administration of unplanned absence should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

Employees should provide accurate information for unplanned absence, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

Managers and process owners should apply the unplanned absence language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

Administration of unplanned absence should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

7. Separation from Employment

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for separation from employment. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

On separation, accrued unused PTO is paid at the employee's base rate in the final paycheck. Final-pay timing is governed by Section 7 of the Compensation and Payroll Guide (BPT-FIN-PAY-009).

For separation from employment, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

This separation from employment provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

The examples and explanatory wording in this separation from employment section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

For separation from employment, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

8. Manager Responsibilities

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for manager responsibilities. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

Managers evaluate requests using staffing needs, deadlines, and order received. A manager should communicate the approval decision before the employee makes nonrefundable travel commitments.

Managers and process owners should apply the manager responsibilities language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

Administration of manager responsibilities should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

Employees should provide accurate information for manager responsibilities, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

Managers and process owners should apply the manager responsibilities language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

9. Recordkeeping

This section explains how information related to recordkeeping is documented, retained, or protected. Records should be limited to the information needed to administer the written rule and should be handled by the responsible BluePeak function.

The HR portal record is used to show requests, approvals, accrued PTO, carryover, and the maximum-balance pause. Payroll uses the applicable balance when processing a separation payout.

The examples and explanatory wording in this recordkeeping section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

For recordkeeping, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

This recordkeeping provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

The examples and explanatory wording in this recordkeeping section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

10. Questions and Exceptions

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for questions and exceptions. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

Questions about this policy, a balance, or a site-specific exception should be directed to People Operations. A written agreement may state a different eligibility rule for a temporary worker, intern, or contractor.

Employees should provide accurate information for questions and exceptions, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

Managers and process owners should apply the questions and exceptions language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

Administration of questions and exceptions should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

Employees should provide accurate information for questions and exceptions, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.