

Bereavement and Compassionate Leave Policy

BluePeak Technologies | Leave policy corpus

This document is fictional and was created only as a training dataset for a student Employee FAQ Chatbot. It is not legal, HR, tax, medical, or employment advice.

Document ID	BPT-HR-BER-013	Version	v1.0
Effective date	2026-01-01	Next review date
Owner	People Operations	Classification	Internal Training Data
Source URL	https://intranet.bluepeak.example/hr/policies/bereavement	Policy category	Leave

1. Purpose

This held-back policy establishes paid bereavement and compassionate leave, additional unpaid time, the request route, and available support. It is intended for the live upload, categorization, approval, and indexing demonstration.

For purpose, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

Managers and process owners should apply the purpose language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

The examples and explanatory wording in this purpose section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

Employees should provide accurate information for purpose, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

2. Eligibility

This section identifies who the Bereavement and Compassionate Leave Policy applies to and which employment or coverage conditions control. Eligibility must be determined from this document rather than inferred from a similarly named benefit, leave type, reimbursement program, or site practice.

The leave is available from the first day of employment and has no service requirement.

Managers and process owners should apply the eligibility language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

The examples and explanatory wording in this eligibility section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

Employees should provide accurate information for eligibility, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

This eligibility provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

3. Immediate Family Leave

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for immediate family leave. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

An employee receives 5 paid days for the death of an immediate family member. Immediate family means a spouse or domestic partner, child, parent, sibling, grandparent, and the equivalent in-law relationships. Additional unpaid leave of up to 10 days is available with manager approval.

The examples and explanatory wording in this immediate family leave section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.

Employees should provide accurate information for immediate family leave, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

This immediate family leave provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

4. Extended Family and Others

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for extended family and others. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

An employee receives 2 paid days for the death of an extended family member or a person in a close personal relationship.

Employees should provide accurate information for extended family and others, review the status shown in the designated system, and raise a discrepancy when the system record does not match the written policy. The responsible team should investigate the difference using the effective date, version, and document identifier shown on the first page.

This extended family and others provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

Administration of extended family and others should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

5. Compassionate Leave

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for compassionate leave. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

An employee may receive up to 3 paid days for a serious illness in the immediate family.

This compassionate leave provision is intended to be understandable without relying on a verbal shortcut. When a question involves more than one policy topic, the answer should cite each applicable section and explain how the provisions work together instead of selecting a rule merely because its wording appears to be the closest match.

Administration of compassionate leave should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

For compassionate leave, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

6. Requesting Bereavement Leave

This section describes the required administrative path for requesting bereavement leave. A request is evaluated under the stated eligibility, notice, documentation, and approval rules; submitting information does not by itself change a limit or create approval.

The employee requests leave through Form HR-102. Documentation is not required.

Administration of requesting bereavement leave should remain traceable from the employee question to the controlling policy text. The named owner may explain the provision and coordinate the relevant teams, but the explanation should preserve every stated threshold, eligibility condition, exception, and effective date contained in this document.

For requesting bereavement leave, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

Managers and process owners should apply the requesting bereavement leave language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

7. Additional Support

This section sets out the BluePeak rule for additional support. It should be applied with the document metadata, the related sections in this policy, and any stated cross-reference so that a number or phrase is not taken out of context.

EAP counseling is available under BPT-HR-BEN-007.

For additional support, the policy separates the underlying entitlement or standard from the procedure used to administer it. Employees should first identify the rule that applies, then follow the stated request, approval, record, or escalation path. A similar word or number in another BluePeak document may describe a different program and should not be substituted for this section.

Managers and process owners should apply the additional support language consistently and preserve the record that supports the decision. Communications should identify the relevant document and section so that the employee can distinguish the written policy from an informal explanation, a draft, or a rule that applies only at another site.

The examples and explanatory wording in this additional support section clarify how the stated rule operates; they do not increase a cap, shorten a deadline, create a new payment, or remove an approval. Where the document contains a local-law footnote or a site-specific entry, that exception should be considered together with the general rule rather than read in isolation.